Chapter 1 by Zachery Hazell

Toby was curled up into a ball in the living room windowsill, back to the sun and his tail swishing impatiently, waiting for his human family to get home from where ever they go every morning. Though most of the time Toby only had simply cat thoughts, today a strange thing popped into his head. Toby jumped off the windowsill and he walked to the hall and into the large human's room. Staring at the strange machine that was left on, he jumped onto the bed, then onto the desk, approaching this machine. It had a weird looking window and a long board, filled with symbols which he could surprisingly recognize. He bumped and circular device and the window lit up. He began hits the symbols on the board...typing what you're reading now.
